

Just as Arthur thought he was in the greatest peril, Wind Weaver swooped down and caught him in her talons. She carried Arthur all the way back to the gods' hall, where he triumphantly handed both glass jars to Thor.

Odin, the father of the gods, appeared and emptied the jars into a giant cauldron. With a sudden flash of light, a huge golden rope began to rise, winding its way up through the air.

